It was forty-five years after the creation of Schneider Electric, known then as Schneider & Cie, that the company diversified its offering and entered the electrical market. Now, with 150 years of pioneering excellence, our expertise and industry knowledge in energy management systems and automation has helped evolve the business into a leader that is shaping the future of energy efficiency and sustainability. This milestone is not merely a marker of longevity, but a testament to relentless innovation in a rapidly changing energy landscape, thanks to the work of thousands of electrical and electromechanical engineers over time.

Here, we're proud to take you on a journey through our history, exploring the foundational years, groundbreaking innovations, and the path we are taking towards a more sustainable future.

Schneider Electric made its foray into the electricity market in 1881. This entrance was marked by participation in the International Fair of Electricity in Paris, where the burgeoning potential of electrical power was on full display.

Schneider Electric's growth was significantly driven by strategic acquisitions of companies with a strong history of innovation, many of which Schneider & Cie purchased shares in from the early stages of the creation of these companies.
