Safety is our first priority

Our monitoring systems detect outages when they occur, and our restoration teams always work hard to make each outage as brief as possible, because we understand how crucial electricity is to each and every one of us.

Restoring power to community services such as hospitals, emergency and public safety services, and water and sewage stations is always first priority.

Finally, we repair smaller lines until crews get down to individual lines in neighborhoods. We won't stop until power has been restored to every customer.

The Storm Center tracks progress and moves crews to assist in restoration efforts to ensure all customers' service is restored as quickly and safely as possible.

Once your damaged service is repaired and Georgia Power is notified, we will schedule the reconnection of your service.
